

PottieStickers From Aaron Barrada Make Toilet Training Profitable

Aaron Barrada, Inc., recently introduced PottieStickers, a portable toilet training system that kids love, according to the company. "Finally, there's a way to make money with toilet training," says Tammie Aaron-Barrada, company founder. "PottieStickers fill a market niche that is missing in portable toilet training with our busy life-styles on the go."

Using a simple rewards system, PottieStickers is designed so that children receive one PottieSticker for sitting, two for peeing, and two for pooping. Made of thick durable stock, PottieStickers are designed with small fingers in mind and designed so that any direction is right-side up. In addition, adults can visit the PottieStickers website and print out over 30 free PottieSticker reward certificates to give the child during toilet training (the sitting award, the big flush, the bull's eye award, etc.)

The stickers come 12 packages to a clip strip, which includes three sets (6 items) in each package—one for at home, one for day care, one to go in a purse, etc. A special introductory offer includes a five percent discount and free shipping on orders of a case (12 clip strip sets of 12 packages) or more. Manufacturers suggested retail price is a three-pack of Pottie Stickers for $12.99. A percentage of all sales are donated to cancer research.
